That Summertime Fringe

April 25, 2016

Matisse wrap sandals from Bloomingdales

Haute Hippie leather fringe skirt

Nautica swimsuit

Coming from NYC to Coachella is like overpassing spring and leaving winter for full-blown summer. Now I am currently back in NYC, and the weather is surprisingly upbeat and the birds are chirpy, and things seem to be on the fringe of something delightfully new. Summer is calling and memories are rolling back. I'm not passionate about any other season as much as summer, I'm sure that is easy to tell. The Grecian sandals start to come back out to play and they never seem to want to leave my feet. This particular pair by Matisse Footwear is the perfect compliment to all my summertime skirts. I picked this pair up at Bloomingdales, and it stuck out from the pack of warm weather sandals in the whole department store because of its subtle bohemian-ness and quality suede. I even love it under a long maxi skirt on chillier days . . . such a transitional pair of sandals.

And I love fringe in the summer because it moves with me. All of my twists and turns late into night are overly exaggerated by its length and infinite motion in every direction. Fringe is the energy of the season to come and this leather skirt embodies that all. Every time I come back to California around this time of the year, I realize again how lucky I am to call this place my home. A place where people from all over the world flock to all year long in search of sunshine, tans, happiness and a new way of life that seems effortless yet escapist at the exact same time. California really is a dreamland, if you set your foot in the right parts. Where nature is a plenty in all directions and faces are friendly and noses are a little sunburnt at the tips and where a morning hike may replace three cups of coffee. When I come home and focus on these things, I forget about the traffic and the smog and the Hollywood night scene and the too many vegan restaurants lining the streets in Venice Beach. No, I focus only on the things that suit me because they will forever be mine. They are in my blood. Those are the things I will always hold onto, even though I currently live all the way on the other side of the country. There will always be no place like home. And every time I'm away, my skin itches for that dry desert heat. And it makes me sad when I've been away too long and forget what it feels like. And then when I do feel it, it's as if I've felt it all along. So keep myself on this energy high left over from a sun-soaked weekend in the California desert, I'll take the fringe back to NYC with me to dance with in this summer. It might be sticky, but it'll be the next best thing.

One of the most delightful experiences of our stay in Reims, France with Veuve Clicquot was the Veuve Clicquot Ponsardin House, founded in 1772, and it has been running its engines ever since. The history of Madame Clicquot and the lifetime of her work dedicated to champagne was ingrained into our minds as we toured the house and the company's original cellars where the champagne has been aged to perfection for decades and decades. I know that her legacy will stay with me forever. Madame Clicquot was a widow at the age of 27 ("clicquot" means "widow" in French), and the family business was left in her hands to run. From that moment on, the history of champagne in France (and the world over) changed forever, and for the better. She really stuck with the motto, "Only one quality, the finest." Because really, if you think about it, the woman always has the better taste. hehe. Her natural instincts, trust in her gut and passion for perfection were the things that brewed up what many believe to be the best champagne ever tasted. She paved the world of champagne to come. The model and the standards. She set the bar to an extreme level of greatness. To her champagne was a science, an art and a way of life. Such an inspiring story on the front of female empowerment and self motivation to say the least.

We partook in a mixology lesson one day at the house and concocted our very own mixed cocktails with fresh ingredients and the new Veuve Clicquot Rich champagne. Mine was mixed with some sliced kiwi, pomegranate seeds and orange extract from the peel. I was going for a drink that was summer and fresh, but also easy on the eyes and full of color. It may not have won best mixed cocktail in terms of originality, but I thoroughly enjoyed drinking mine and I'll drink it again and again!

The Veuve Clicquot house is very special, with only exclusive guests allowed to stay over. We felt lucky we got to explore the rooms of the house, each inspired by a different country. Each room's color scheme overwhelmingly fluid. The American room like liquid gold. While the majority of our group was obsessed with the French room, I was drawn the most to the green-tea inspired Japanese room. Of course I would be. I hope you enjoy a few of these pictures I snapped during our time in Reims.

This Season Is All About The Long Short

The long short. Sure, it's an oxymoron, and yes, it seems to bridge some no man's land between the leg-baring level of daisy dukes and the ankle territory touted by trousers. Yes, typically, the long denim short is a trademark piece of the rude suburban skater, a naughties-era Nicole Richie circa The Simple Life, or a try-hard cool dad, but the extended short is reaching for far more chic horizons today! And it's all thanks to the Hadids. Just this past week, Bella Hadid balanced out her look of a naval-baring tank with some hip-hanging, sheared-off black shorts that hit several inches above the knee—a nice refresher from the typical hot pants that tend to make the rounds on oft-Instagrammed celebrity bottoms.

Bella isn't the only Hadid getting in on the above-the-knee option of transitional long shorts. Gigi also made the case for the long denim short a few weeks back, wearing her version with a cropped gray sweater during a family photo. Like Bella, Gigi also dressed up her long shorts with a pair of heels—an unlikely but cool way to elevate the slacker staple. Above, see the coolest ways to wear the newest not-so-short shorts length of summer all season long.

THE SLIDE-ON

New York City living is all about comfort. I LIVE in my shoes. When I get a new pair, I know that with all the walking I do, my shoes will hang onto their very last breath. Right now, I'm all about the classic leather slide-on mule...especially this one by Matisse that I picked up at the Bloomingdales 59th street store. The Clover. They're edgy yet simple and go with just about everything. I'm already eyeing the leopard pair. Here I'm caught leaving Vinegar Hill House, one of my favorite brunch spots just on the border of my DUMBO neighborhood. Slide-ons are perfect for just that. Lazy walks to your favorite brunch spot. No socks required. Keeping things easy in black and white, but of course with a little hint of sparkle. Now, walk this way baby.

Exclusive! Olivia Holt's Coachella 2016 Diary

What really happened when the young actress went to Coachella for the first time, in her own words By Sharon Clott Kanter

One of My Favorite Looks

"I loved this look, which is a Forever 21 top, Johnny Was kimono, One Teaspoon shorts, Matisse boots, Perverse sunglasses and a Rebecca Minkoff fanny pack. It was just big enough to fit my Polaroid camera and some lip gloss and my phone. It was perfect because I wore that on the last day. The first two days I didn't get enough pictures on my Polaroid because I forgot I had it in my backpack before. It fit perfectly in my fanny pack. It was so fun."

Memories for a Lifetime

"My friend Nat and I go everywhere and we just take photos—it's our thing. We have the same taste in music, the same taste in clothing, the same taste when it comes to taking photos. We know what we want. And we loved this pineapple wall and we were drinking coconut water out of coconuts. Now that our time at Coachella's over, we can look back and we have those super rad memories. Going into it, we didn't know how we were going to feel, but coming out of it we had the best time. Our legs are sore from running from stage to stage and dancing so much! We can't wait to go back."

Ditch the Gladiators for Coachella! The New Wave of Festival Footwear

When Kate Moss stomped through the mud at 2005's Glastonbury Festival in nothing more than hip-slung short shorts and a pair of Hunter Wellington boots, a new age in festival footwear was born. In one fell swoop, the model and fashion icon had resolved the quandary of finding a chic and practical way to take on mosh pits, unpredictable weather, and even camping with singular style and comfort. In drier climes, that carefree, dress-for-your-surroundings approach gave rise to the now-ubiquitous moccasins and gladiators we've seen kicking up plenty of dust along the Coachella desert trails in recent years. But it's high time for a fresh look, and luckily this season there are plenty new shoes to choose from. For the festivalgoer who wants to remain a step ahead of the crowd, meet this summer's best concert shoes.

Think Tabitha Simmons's chic gray hiking boots—a fun and leg-lengthening play on hitting the trails on the way to the stage. Miu Miu's metallic flat cowboy boots, trimmed in pink kitty cat embellishments, cheekily put the “Wild” back in the West. Ditch the been-there gladiator for the platform espadrille from Gucci or the vibrant Chloé knotted leather wedge sandal. No matter what you choose, there have never been more appealing new options for stepping up your front row shoe game. Kate Moss would certainly approve.

Above, the best new festival-worthy boots, sandals, and everything in between.
