Practice makes perfect. The old adage holds especially true when it comes to shooting. But we live in a three-dimensional world, so practicing on a two-dimensional target is far from optimal. Enter Rubber Dummies.

Rubber Dummies, founded in 2013, has taken tactical training to a whole new level of reality with its unique, life-sized, 3-D targets. These head and torso targets are anatomically correct and give instant feedback on shot placement.

Rubber Dummies are durable and reusable, which makes them economical as well. Each Dummy can take thousands of rounds. It can be shot at with virtually any caliber, from any direction, from as close as point blank range to as far away as you can shoot.

The unique material composition allows projectiles to pass through the Dummies, and to "self heal" after each shot, while the reactive outer skin clearly shows the point of impact of every bullet.

The rugged body is constructed of recycled materials, and can be punched, struck, and hit. It can also be used for edged weapons training.

At any point, the Dummies can be quickly "reset" with spray paint (included in the kit). It takes only a matter of seconds.

Rubber Dummies can be dressed with shirts, jackets and hats, etc. for the ultimate life-like simulation. Reality is further enhanced by the use of kill shot packets.

The kill shot packets contain a red powder that disburses when bullets pass through them. They can be tacked onto the back of the dummies (tacks included).

The Dummies weigh in at 30 lbs each, and the stands add another 20 lbs. The bracket that the Dummies sit on is fabricated from 3/8" AR500 steel plate, which ensures that it won't be destroyed if it gets hit. The stand can be easily assembled and disassembled in under a minute, and the sturdy base has holes for staking down.

Rubber Dummies takes great pride in the fact that its product is 100% made in the USA.
